CHAPTER LVIII.-HELP.

For, inching out to the end of the yard, he waved his hand toward his persecutors with a gesture of light-hearted derision that unmistakably identified him as Alan Law to Mr. Barcus, and forthwith dropped to the water, feetforemost.

Barcus caught his breath and felt his heart was besting.

At all events, it seemed a frightfully near thing when the interruption befell which alone could have saved Alan.

Out of the very sky dropped a hydro-aeroplane, cutting the water with a long, graceful curve that brought it, almost at a standstill, directly to the head of the swimmer, and at the same time forced the police at the same time forced the police hoat to sheer widely off, in order to

In that quarter it was presently lost to the sight of Mr. Barcus, engulfed in light folds of haze that were creeping in from seawards to din and tarnish the pristine brilliance of that day. Gravely Barcus lifted his hat in parting salutation to the vanishing point ag salutation to the vanishing point

You are a brave man, my friend." "You are a brave man, my friend," he apostrophized the spirit of Alan Law, "and an uncommon lucky one, and a bit of a damn fool into the bargain. But the more I see of you the more firmly I believe your own assertion that you were born to be hanged!" About 8 o'clock in the evening of the same day a motor car deposited at the Hotel Monolith a gentleman whose weather-beaten and oil-stained motoring cap and duster covered little clothing more than shirt and trousers and assorted oddly in the eyes of the desk farce which you, no doubt, call the history of your grande passion.

"I mean to say—well, several things, to-wit: When I saw you snatched out of the North River I was engaged in trailing a pale-faced villian in a no-tor car concerning whom you probably know far more than I; he, on his part, was busy being a bold, bad kidnaper; Rose was in his power, as we say in such cases. His intentions, however, were nothing more blameworthy than to return her to the arms of her doting parent. I know, because I sleuthed after 'em, even to the house of Seneca Trine. Later I sleuthed some more, following a furtive young man from the house of Trine to the office of the general manager of the New York Central, where he made arrangements for a special to convey the said Trine and retinue to Chicago and points West. It leaves at 3 this afternoon. I was unable to ascertain whether or not Rose is to participate in this hegira, but I know I shall. On the off chance of being useful, I have bribed the train crew to let me impersonate the porter. So, should you be moved to follow and succeed in catching up with us, and observe anybody who looks rather off-color in the party—don't shoot: the said party will be me.

"Yours for the quiet life,
"Tom BARCUS."

Of the many advertised creams and lotions only a few may be used on the face with really beneficial results, and these are in no sense paints or white-washes, nor are they to be used as such and spread over the face to whiten or heighten color or effect.

Whiteness was considered an essential of beauty to the ancients, and one can easily see the reason in the act that awarded the sceptre of beauty to the blonde. White is the color that reflects the greatest number of luminous rays, but the desired pearl-like tint rays, but the desired pearl-like tint is not skilfully attained with paint or liquid white. Barcus caught his breath and felt his heart stop beating. For he was now sure that the fugitive was his friend, and from the end of the yard to the water was a drop of not less than eighty-five feet at the most conservative calculation: a fall that might well kill a man; and Barcus was far beyond possibility of going to Alan's aid.

But the latter took the water neatly, came up uninjured and clearheaded, and without an instant's hesitation struck away toward the middle of the fiudson.

As this happened, the police ran to the stern of the square-rigger, unmored a dery that was related to the mate mind and leered upon by masculine eyes and dealt lightly by vulgar tongues, they have only themselves to blame.

During the (to Barcus, at least) breathless suspense of that chase, the ferryboat drew stolldly farther and still farther away from the scene. Lillian Russell's Answers.

Brunette: Peacock blue, I am sure, would be becoming to you. It lends lustre to the eyes and softens dark hair. For a clear, dark complexion, dark blue may be worn. A touch of cream or green goes well with this shade. Tan sets off hazel eyes, and a combination of tan and blue suits the average brunette. Black dulls the skin, and should not be worn unless worn with a touch of color. Pale blue softens black and makes it much more becoming. Yellow in all tints from pale gold to deep orange is a brunette's color. Black and yellow make too striking a contrast. Pale bluish white lace against the face makes it possible for the brunette to wear purple. Nearly all browns may be worn, but they must be carefully selected. If there is a good deal of color to the face the warm tones of brown are best. If there is pallor, the yellowish browns should be worn.

Mrs. W. T. J.: Thinness when not accompanied by boniness is a gift one ought to be thankful for. I knew a woman who no matter how hard she tried could not put on weight. She then decided to cultivate her thinness by wearing the proper clothing, and she became a most striking woman. The thin woman must cultivate grace. Do not wear heavy clothing but that The thin woman must cultivate grace. Do not wear heavy clothing, but that which falls into natural curves. Soft silks should be worn, in all shades that reflect the light, such as gray, white and violet. Dark colors should be avoided, black especially. High colars should not be worn; low neck or soft lay-down collars are best. Flowered materials may be worn, especially with a dark ground and light flowers.

Troubled Mother asks: Will you please explain what "impetigo" is in bables?

Reply: A contagious skin infection characterized by scatttered vesicles (pimples), which become yellowish, then break, leaving a scaly crust, which looks as if it were "stuck on." The crust falls off, leaving a red patch, which gradually fades. The disease spreads by contact among bables, and is easily curable by simple antiseptic applications. Wash away the crusts with water, dry, and apply a weak (2 per cent) olintment of ammoniated mercury to each spot.

A. C. asks for advice regarding sweaty, foul-smelling, burning feet.
Reply: Bathe the feet in cold water night and morning regularly and wear a fresh pair of stockings each day; also if possible have two pair of shoes and alternate in wearing them. Once a day apply a light wash of formaldehyde solution, using one part of the commercial standard solution in ten to twelve parts water.
